The fact that a Young Men's Christia Association had once more been formed in this city was not generally known out side of religious circles until within the past two weeks, during which time a large number of business men were made aware of the fact by being called on for subscrip tions; and it is to be said to their credit that thus far they have responded liber-ally. This time live, energetic Christian business men are at the head, and they have been untiring in their efforts.

The large, substantial residence at No. 1122 Market street, has been leased and nicely and neatly fitted up for a club house, or whatever name it may be called for the Association. The house sits several feet above the street, and its broad doorway is reached by two short flights of stone steps. In front is a little yard which will be sodded and planted with flowers. Entering, one finds himself in a broad hallway covered with pratty straw matting. On the left are two doule parlors, to be used for assemblies, religious meetings and general purposes. In the rear is a hat and cloak room. Upstairs, the front room is fitted up for a library, reading and writing room. Steel nails are easier to make than iron nails, and I can't see why the Amalganiamated Association wants the price for making steel nails advanced 20 percent. If we were still in the Association this would bring us back to iron nails, or else there would be a strike. But since we are not in that organization, nothing they do will effect us, not even should they strike sgainst the manufacturers' terus. I read that there was no United Nailers' Lodge in Pittsburgh. That is true, for we have no lodges yet; but our organization is just as strong for all that. Some day we will have lodges in all nailing centres. John B. Weir, our president, is now working at several points where several nail mills are located. I guess we know our business better than the Amalgamated did. Why, there is but one lodge of nailers in that association. It is at Mingo Junction, and on Saturday night, I understand, it will forfeit its charter.

Thieves at Wellsburg Thieves were abroad in town on Tuestay night. The cellar of the residence of Captain William Oaks was entered and almost everything in the eatable line carried off. The chicken coops of A. J. Foe and Mr. Edwards were visited and a number of chickens taken. Wednesday morning one "Jack the Tramp" and another party were arrested for a plain drunk. It was afterwards developed that other party were arrested for a pland drunk. It was afterwards developed that a quantity of cider had been taken from the cellar of Mr. Daks and that the tramp knew something of it. A search warrant was taken out and some of the missing goods found at the home of "Jack the Tramp." He had a hearing before Squire Quest and was committed for a further hearing. J. S. Poe fired a load of shot at the party in his father's coop, but a store box prevented the shot from catching the thief.
